

Feitosa, L. (2013) “Roman sexuality: beyond contemporary paradigms”, Doxa. Revista Paulista de Psicologia e Educação, v. 17, 295-308.

The relations between gender and sexuality have been interesting subjects for discussion and research in several areas of scientific knowledge. From a historical perspective, this paper tries to present new experiences about modes and meanings involved in the relation with one's own body and sexuality. These experiences can stimulate reflections on our acceptance of these topics. For that, we analyze how the concepts of sexuality, gender, and masculinity get different conceptions in the Roman society of the first century BC.